The Desloge Family in America

Many of us in the United States can trace our ancestry back to the brave person who dared leave his home in Europe and come to the new world. This took great courage, and it is interesting to learn the reasons why the early immigrants came to America. Some came seeking religious freedom, some for political reasons, others to escape military service. The reasons are as varied as they are numerous.

The founder of the Desloge family in America, Firmin René Desloge, came for a means of livelihood. His father, Joseph Desloge, like many others in France, suffered great losses during the Revolution. He was able to earn a small salary as a tax collector in Paimboeuf, but he never did make more than just enough to take care of his family. It was necessary to try to find a suitable business for each of his sons so that they could make their own way. Madame Desloge, née Marie Angelique Rozier, had a brother, Ferdinand, who had settled in Ste. Genevieve, Missouri, and was doing very well in the mercantile business. She wrote to him from Nantes in 1815:

You will be frightened, my good friend, at the number of my family, it is composed of four daughters and six sons, all healthy and likely to live. I would not regret having given birth to them if I had any fortune to offer them, but the small success we have had in business takes from us all chance of making them successful; our good relations do not abandon us and try to make things easy for us in our misfortunes.

Our son Joseph has had the good fortune to escape the dangers to which he was exposed during the [Napoleonic] war. He is now working for a commercial firm in Morlaix, a position secured for him by my uncle Colas. He is the son who gives us great satisfaction by his good behavior and his activity in work; Adolph, the younger, is in his uncle Rozier's office, he has shown him a thousand kindnesses and looks upon him as his own child; I have a third son whose education is almost finished, strong and having the greatest desire to get on. If it were possible, my good friend, for you to be able to employ him, either to be of use to you or to one of your acquaintances, you would do me a very great service in giving me the means of advancement for him. I dare flatter myself, my dear Ferdinand, that I can count on your good will and the affection that has always united us is a pledge of it.

Ferdinand Rozier had evidently agreed to take the young boy into his family for on Mar. 4, 1817, Madame Desloge wrote to him,

I am grateful, my good friend, for the kind welcome you wish to give one of my children; he also has the most intense desire to know you and to try to be of use to you. . . . He could not have a better guide and I am sure your good wife would willingly look after him.

In 1822 it was finally arranged for Firmin to join his uncle in Missouri. After finishing his studies, he worked with his brother Adolph in his uncle's sugar refinery until his departure. This separation was very hard for the family. In a letter that dealt with the trip and its costs, Madame Desloge admitted:

This separation will not be without a sacrifice on our part, but as we have nothing to leave our children, we must try to contribute to their welfare in other ways and to make them happy; what could we wish for more than to send him to a second father?

Her husband wrote on the same sheet the following letter giving an account of their family.

I have little to add, my dear Ferdinand, to what my good wife has told you above and to which I assent. Yes, my very good friend, if it were only the sacrifice of this separation, so sad to the heart of a father with such a great number; but it is for the welfare of our son, Firmin, who in his 19 years has studied with success at Vannes, Rennes, and Nantes, our different homes. We shall do all in our power for this child, the only one of my six sons whom I can now spare. By the great gentleness of his character and in complying in every way to our wishes and to our decision, trying only to please us and to see things as we do, we find in him the one on whom I can count to assist me in my difficulties. The paltry position of collector of assessed taxes which I have held for six years in this city, gives me only the necessary support for the rest of the family that remain with us and consequently it offers nothing of advantage to my sons, only a very small sum to be able to maintain their good mother, who naturally should survive me. We have given our consent to our son to take this long trip that he may make his way by his work and his savings to pay for his passage, in time, from here to New Orleans, where you have given us the address of a merchant with whom you have business relations, and who, according to your good intentions, will furnish him with the means to ascend the river from there to your residence. For this I shall thank you always and above all in the hope you give us that one day his attentions will put him in touch with your affairs and permit you, my friend, to see your native land again. You can tell your good wife and your little family we shall rejoice to know them. I regret that I lack even this small amount. The disastrous consequences of our unhappy revolution do not permit me to be able to just now to do anything for my young son, other than giving my assent to his wishes. With economy we may be able to help him with our small reserve to send him by the time we have a reply from you, my dear Ferdinand, that is to say in 10 or 15 months from now. To undertake this fine, long voyage, with which your brother seems well satisfied, there is more than the passage money to be provided and we must find a ship sailing from our port, as that would suit me better. My dear Ferdinand, if I only had more means to give my nine children, there would still remain a good share that could only be provided by their inclination to work. My Joseph, who has been married for some time, has a good business in Morlaix, his family consists of three children. Adolph, the second son, is at the head of his uncle's refinery, Firmin, the second to go to work there has been there only 15 months, Timothy is 21 and his brother Jules is 15. They both follow the sea. Little Aristide, aged 10, is the only one remaining with us and besides there are three girls, our oldest Josephine, is the only one who is married, she is the wife of an officer of a regiment of the Line now in garrison at Bordeaux. They have one child, a little boy of 4. Cezarine is 25 and little Louisa is 13. I embrace you from my heart. I greet your wife and your little family with all respect, in the hope of having the pleasure of doing so in person.

Your good friend and brother,

J. [oseph] Desloge.

It was finally arranged for young Firmin to take an American ship leaving for New Orleans. Madame Desloge wrote once more to her brother. Her motherly love and tender concern are expressed in her letter. Much as she grieved to see her son go so far away, she was happy at his prospects in America.

I am asking, my dear Ferdinand, for your care and your kindness and that of your good wife, for our child. You are a father and you know what such a separation must cost us at our age. We have little hope of seeing him again, also for our consolation, we will need the hope that you will take our places by your advice and your care. His youth deprives him of experience, but his conduct and his good disposition make me hope that he will try in every way to please you and to be of use to you in your business.

Firmin's father went to Nantes to see him leave, but missed him and was very much upset at not being able to bid him farewell. He wrote to his son on Nov. 12, 1822, and ended his letter as follows:

I hope your crossing will be a short and a safe one, that you will join your uncle promptly and that in another land you will find all the good fortune you deserve. These are the sincere wishes of your best friend and father who loves you more than you know and who sends them to you as you go so far from him, as he did not have the pleasure of giving you his blessing.

After five months at sea, Firmin Desloge arrived at New Orleans, Louisiana. He continued his trip by boat up the Mississippi River to Ste. Genevieve, Missouri, where he was met by his Uncle Ferdinand Rozier. After Firmin had worked for him for six months, his Uncle Ferdinand decided he was capable of going into business for himself. He furnished him with a store of about four thousand piastres value and gave him as a partner a Mr. Daly who had much business experience and who, it was thought, could advise him. Firmin wrote to his mother in July, 1824, telling her of the country, and that he lived in Potosi. It was decided in November of 1824, to be to their best advantage to dissolve the partnership, Firmin buying all his property and continuing the business with Mr. Daly as clerk. In 1826 "Firmin Desloge & Co." was established at Potosi, Firmin going into business with his uncle on half-shares. During the years 1830-31 he built a furnace for smelting ore and started operation in November, 1831. For more than a decade he and his cousin, Francois Rozier, worked in partnership, but in February of 1842 this was dissolved. Francois Rozier relinquished his share in the business and returned to Ste. Genevieve.

Firmin's mother was concerned for his social welfare. She slyly made suggestions in her letters about his loneliness and hinted at his thinking about getting married. He was well established in his business, however, before he took this step. His description of his fiancée, Cynthian McIlvaine, appears in this letter to his family in France.

She is a young American by birth and parentage. Her father, of the Scotch name of John McIlvaine is only a farmer, but in our thoroughly republican country that estate holds the proper social rank it deserves, one of the most honorable, if not the most distinguished. Such a determination will no doubt surprise you as the young lady brings me no fortune; nor superior talents nor astonishing beauty. But she has slipped into my affection and fortune could not buy what is sufficient into me. She belongs to a respected and numerous family in our little village, where it is difficult to give a young lady a brilliant education, but maternal cares soon put all those accomplishments aside. She speaks only English, which is the language in general use in our country. The greatest difference and the one that I most regret, is in our religious opinions, but I do not despair of overcoming this difficulty, for according to the custom of this country she had had no religious education and, in spite of some little scrupulous prejudices, her judgement is open to conviction and to the arguments of the best cause. Necessarily there is a risk about her convictions, but I dare hope for a realization of my hopes. The approbation of my uncle should be a guarantee of the suitability of my marriage with this young lady.

Firmin and Cynthian were married on June 21, 1832. Firmin wrote to his mother telling her about his wedding.

The ceremony, according to the wishes of both parties, was very simple, celebrated by a Catholic priest and, as is the custom in such cases, at the home of the young girl's parents. We had no other guests than the members of our respective families; for me my uncle and two of his sons formed all the procession. I am happy then, my dear mother, to tranquilize you about the celebration of our marriage and I do not doubt that I can bring Cynthian to share my religious beliefs, as she has until now, been influenced by none in particular; I have even her promise already that she will not interfere at all in the religious education of our children, if we have the happiness to be so favored by Providence. You may think we did not delay to start house-keeping; the same day we were installed at home to my great satisfaction.

Madame Desloge was very affectionate and welcomed Cynthian into the family wholeheartedly. But she was also very religious and was concerned about the spiritual as well as the temporal interests of her family. Consequently her joy in the marriage of the young couple was complete when after three years she learned that Cynthian would soon become a Catholic. She rejoiced with the arrival of each child. In May, 1838, after the third child was born, she wrote "May the name of Desloge, like that of Rozier, not be extinguished for many a year." The twelve children of Firmin and Cynthian and their descendants have carried out her wish and this geneology shows how many bear the name of Desloge today.

Firmin's brother, Jules, settled in Santiago, Cuba. He had five children: Jules, Hortencia, Emma, Emile, and Leonce. "The name Desloge is extending all over the world," he wrote in 1843. His family has died out in Cuba and today leaves no descendants. However, Firmin's great-grandson, Louis Francis Desloge II, lives in Havana, Cuba, and is married to Graciela de Cardena of that city. Once more the Desloge family is established in Cuba. They have two children, Louis Francis III and Graciela Marie. Moreover, while the name Desloge is so well known in the new world, it has almost disappeared in the old.

This sketch of Firmin's family is written to give clearer knowledge and a better understanding of the founder of the family in America. A person's character is finely drawn in his letters. The letters quoted herein are from the collection of letters translated from the French and assembled in a six-volume work by Cousin Josephine Cobb. There are a number of these sets distributed throughout the family. One set is also available at the Missouri Historical Society. But very few members of the family have read them and have learned to know and understand Firmin and Cynthian. The "Letters" read like a novel. We can all take a lesson from Madame Desloge's wish for her son and try to live up to the high standards she set.

Think often of your mother, my good Firmin. She claims this return for all the prayers she addresses to the Lord for her children. Everything for your joy, health, and prosperity in this world below and perfect joy in the next is what my heart desires for you.

Dear Father Tallon:

I am indeed sorry, very sorry, that Dear Mrs. Fusz of your parish by maiden name Miss Josephine Desloge, as your letter of yesterday informs me, is at the point of death. As in duty bound by the ties of religion, charity and friendship I pray fervently for her that God may grant her the grace of a happy death or a speedy recovery.

She was a most worthy pious exemplary child of about twelve or fourteen years of age attending the catechism class of St. James Church, Potosi in the years 1852, 1853, 1854, when I was on the mission at that place and at the Old Mines, Josephine was the third oldest child the second oldest daughter of Firmin Desloge of Potosi, and his wife a convert Cythiana McIlvaine Desloge. The oldest child of the family, Frank, was then (in 1852) a student at the Jesuits University in St. Louis, and Lucy the oldest daughter was a pupil at the Sacred Heart Convent, St. Louis. Josephine, Jane, Firmin, and Julius, were taught at home, by a private teacher, under the eyes of their parents. The youngest of the family, Clara, I baptized in 1854.

In the summer vacations when Frank and Lucy were at home, they played and sang the Mass and Vespers with the Choir in the organ gallery, and Mr. and Mrs. Desloge with the younger children sitting in the front pew before the Sanctuary sang the alternate verses and responses. The family was very happy and prosperous, and greatly beloved and respected by the whole community in the town and county where they belonged. Josephine was in disposition, manner and appearance, like her mother, gentle, quiet, kind, affectionate, modest, unobtrusive. No doubt, you have noticed eminent in her these exalted christian virtues which she learned thoroughly and practiced carefully from the word and example of her distinguished parents, who with loving hearts spared neither pains nor cost for the proper education of their children. I have always had profound love, respect and veneration for the Desloge family as model christians, and none among them more deserving or dearer to God as I think, then your daughter in Christ Josephine Fusz whom may God love and provide for as His Own.

I am, Dear Rev. Father, very truly your devoted servant in Christ,

John J. Hogan,
Bishop of Kansas City
